We Resist, We Rise

Unitarian Universalist Veatch Program at Shelter Rock
As steward of the generous bequest of Caroline Veatch, the Unitarian Universalist Veatch Program at Shelter Rock has been a leader in progressive philanthropy since 1959.
We Resist. We Rise. We are Connected.

In these pages we invite you to pause with us and take heart. Know that every organization the congregation supports through the Veatch Program holds countless stories of people who have refused to stand alone in the face of threats to human dignity and well-being.

In expressing the principles of Unitarian Universalism we stand with bold leaders in communities nationwide whose essential work resists the oppression and turmoil that defined the past year.

At Veatch Weekend at Shelter Rock in January 2017, Cristina Jimenez, Co-Founder and Executive Director of United We Dream, helped us to understand how the political is personal. Representing over 300,000 immigrant youth who are using Veatch funding to win just immigration policy in our country, Cristina shared her own story. Formerly undocumented herself, Cristina told us that she lived with the fear of knowing that if the new administration succeeded in its pledge to end DACA (Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals), her own family could be torn apart by deportation.

The headlines about immigration come down to stories of people—families grappling with the unthinkable. At any moment their children could be forced to leave their homes, their friends and their aspirations to find a way to survive in countries of their birth, not the places where they have forged their lives.

How do we make sense of this kind of vulnerability in our midst?

In the face of this vulnerability, fear is real. And it has the potential to isolate us.

As you review these pages, we hope you will remember that Veatch funding has, for generations, sustained the fabric of social justice organizing in our country. The UU Congregation at Shelter Rock has long stood up to fear and isolation. Through Veatch’s long term, core support of those most directly impacted by injustice, we stand with our partners in philanthropy and with the hundreds of organizations we have supported.

Our principles continue to call us to action. The congregation’s funding of the work of people like Cristina—this is living our principles.

In October 2017, we celebrated with United We Dream when the MacArthur Foundation recognized Cristina and their work as ‘genius.’ We honor their commitment to stand up, not back down—what United We Dream calls being “undocumented and unafraid”—in the face of very real threats.

This is the work that Veatch has been supporting for nearly six decades.

Many people are suffering from the real impact of being targeted, based simply on who they are.

In addition to the upheaval in the lives of immigrants, low-wage workers who finally have health insurance brace for its loss. Weather extremes again bring the impacts of climate change to our shores. And we enter 2018 knowing that the FBI has designated a new category of terror threats inside the United States, tracking what it calls “Black identity extremists” and targeting leaders who have been organizing to resist the criminalization of people of color—a movement that has come into the spotlight through the work of Veatch grantees.

We take heart knowing that we are on the ground where we are needed the most, investing in people and in programs that are a source of liberation. Immigrants, workers, LGBTQ people, family farmers, low-income women, Black-led organizations—they are out there every day, acting on their own behalf, and leading the way to lasting solutions.

Last January, Cristina also reminded us of another core principle of Unitarian Universalism, that our interdependence with one another is our strength. Even with immigration policy the defining issue of her life’s work, she urged us to remember that we can never isolate one issue from any other because, in truth, none of us live single-issue lives. When any one of us is targeted for who we are, we are all at risk.

As you review these pages, we hope you will be reminded that through our long term core support of those most directly impacted by injustice, Veatch stands with our partners. Our principles continue to call us to action, to support organized resistance, led by people fighting for self-respect and respect for others.

Their stories hold keys to our future.

New Board Leadership at Veatch

In June, we thanked Katie Kurjakovic for her stellar service as Chair of the Board of Governors and welcomed Carole Alexander into that leadership role, assisted by Vice Chair Carol Garbarino. We also said goodbye to Veatch Governor Mark Hartman. We are grateful to him for his contributions during his time on the Veatch Board. We are happy to welcome new Governors Andy Greene, Corinne Hayden and UUCSR President Klaus Masuch, representing the Board of Trustees.

Saru Jayaraman is the Co-Founder and Co-Director of Veatch grantee Restaurant Opportunities Centers United (ROC-United), which played a leading role in exposing the history of labor law violations at the restaurants of Secretary of Labor nominee, Andy Pudzer, the head of Carl’s Jr. and Hardee’s fast food chains. ROC-United’s efforts successfully led to the withdrawal of Pudzer’s nomination in the days before he was to face a Senate confirmation hearing.

“...when we did this survey, we did it over the holidays, the busiest time for restaurant workers... 564 filled out these surveys, and two-thirds of a mostly female workforce said they experienced very scary, pretty horrific sexual harassment... The Department of Labor has found that more than half of his restaurants were in violation of basic wage and hour laws, like not paying overtime, not paying... and, worst of all... just incredible amounts of sexual harassment.”
